

The Evening Star.

No. 14,418.

WASHINGTON, D. C., TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1899—FOURTEEN PAGES.

TWO CENTS.

Mrs. Rosenstein Still Alive.

Special Dispatch to The Evening Star.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 16.—Mrs. Rosenstein, the remaining victim of the Slidell tragedy, is still alive, but her death is momentarily expected.

ALLEGED ACCOMPLICE.

The Search for the Murderer of the Rosensteins Near Boyd's.

Special Dispatch to The Evening Star.

ROCKVILLE, Md., May 16.—Notwithstanding the diligent search that Sheriff Thompson and his deputies have been making since the morning of the Slidell tragedy, the capture of Humphrey Brown, the supposed murderer, has not yet been effected, and the authorities are completely at sea as to his whereabouts. It is almost certain that the man who was traced as far as Forest Glen was the fugitive, but after he left that point nothing definite is known as to the direction he took. A good description of the man has been telegraphed throughout this state and Virginia, and State's Attorney Kilgour and Sheriff Thompson are both confident that the man will soon be apprehended. It is not believed that Brown has left the county. The search was resumed this morning, and is being confined to the lower section of the county, where Brown is known to have acquaintances. Up to noon no new clue had been discovered.

John Brown and Nellie Turner, who were arrested and lodged in jail here on suspicion of having been implicated in the crime, have been persuaded to talk about the affair. The man, who is a relative of the fugitive, is reticent, and will say nothing further than that Humphrey Brown left his house before sun-up on Saturday morning and went in the direction of Rosenstein's store, and that about sun-up he (John Brown) went down the same road, and as he reached Rosenstein's he saw a man run across the road. The man wore a hat like Humphrey Brown's hat, but he was unable to tell whether he was white or black. The woman was considerably more talkative. She professed to know nothing about the assault upon the Rosensteins, but told of a number of threats Humphrey had made against different people. She also stated that a day or two before the Rosensteins were attacked she heard him remark that he was going to do something desperate and then skip the country.

Some people believe that more than one person had a hand in the attack upon the Rosensteins, while others are of the opinion that it was the work of Humphrey Brown alone. If there was an accomplice it is believed that John Brown was the man, as he was intimate with Humphrey Brown and is regarded as none too good for such an undertaking.

Of the two men, however, Humphrey Brown's reputation is decidedly the worse. He has been convicted in this county of various offenses, and has served two terms in the penitentiary. He is regarded as a desperate character and is a terror to all who know him. It is now thought that it was he who set fire to the residence of Mr. John McCullough, at Boyd's, which was totally destroyed several days ago, as he is known to dislike Mr. McCullough.

While the people of the county are considerably excited over the occurrence it is not believed that the man will be lynched if captured. Under the law the grand jury which set at the March term of court can be called together at any time, and it is said that upon the capture of the murderer this action will be taken and a trial speedily follow.